“ Jeff and I met on a midnight train years ago. Traveling alone I was scared and exhausted. Stuck at the station with everything closed, I had asked the counter if there were any vending machines, there weren't. Jeff offered me an apple and a water and we spent the rest of the night playing cards, eating apples, we even went on a midnight stroll to the corner store. We got back on the train and talked the whole trip from California to Oregon, me to Washington . We became pen pals from different worlds and were friends for life. I'll miss his jokes, his smile, and how he always seemed to understand my chaos in my own life. I'll miss his messages, his jokes, and his truths. Who's gonna be there at midnight to listen to my nonsense now
