“Ronnie and his family lived next door to me in Springfield when I was a little girl. I remember later, when I was 12 and he must have been 13, that he was on a backpacking trip into the Three Sisters Wilderness that Willamalane Parks and Rec was leading. He was the only kid who hadn't been supplied according to the directions-- he had a wooden-framed canvas army surplus backpack full of canned goods. I remember looking back down the trail and watching the cans roll down the hill as he sobbed in rage and frustration. His face was red and he was exhausted. Someone walked him back and he missed the high country that I'll never forget. It changed my life. It might have changed his if the trip leaders had helped him carry his stuff.
